In the center of the basement is the steam heating apparatus. It is something new in this city and a slight description may be interesting: It is known as Light's low pressure system: there are two boilers, but the steam from them does not pass to the rooms and heat through radiators by direct radiation as in the other public building of the city. On the contrary, the steam passes through pipes to the four corners of the building, where there are coils; these coils are enclosed in air shafts, two for each room. The pure air entering from the outside is here heated and passes to the rooms where it is regulated by common registers. There are two of these shafts to each room. When it is zero outside a temperature of 70 degrees can be obtained inside the building and the air is pure all the time, and not the same air breathed over and over again as in the system of direct radiation. Besides, all trouble with the steam heaters is avoided, which is at present a great trouble

The Public Library.

The plan to establish and maintain a pub-lic library in Wheeling, using as a nucleus the volumes belonging to the defunct Wheeling Library Association, at length the volumes belonging to the defunct Wheeling Library Association, at length seems in a fair way to be carried out. The committee appointed by the stockholders of the Library Association to make the transfer to the Board of Education, met Saturday night, Messra. Samuel Laughlin, W. P. Hubbard, A. J. Clark and M. Reilly being present. The committee agreed to make the transfer formally as soon as a suitable place could be secured.

the transfer formally as soon as a suitable place could be secured.

The income of the Board for library purposes under the levy authorized by the bill recently passed by the Legislature, will be about $5,000 per annum, which certainly ought to rent first class quarters, and pay all the running expenses of the library, as well as leave a balance to purchase new volumes with from time to time. Several details remain to be arranged, but there is reason to hope that the library and reading room will be open before spring is far advanced.

MARTIN'S FERRY.

Saturday night the "dirty dozen," inspired by bad whisky and bad blood, took the "war path" again, as is usual on Saturday nights, and for a time put at defiance law and order. Their attack first was directed against Peter Fair, as he came out of the Amalgamated Association, who, in extending his hand to welcome them, caught the first one fair on the nose, and sent him sprawling in the gutter; the rest concluded that Peter was too cordial, and sought for "greener fields to conquer." They next espied Anderson McGrew, an inoffensive fellow, and concluded to try his mettle. He, too, received the first two in a very satisfactory manner, sending the first flat on his back across the railroad, causing him to see more stars than he ever saw before in his life, and he thought they were "shooting stars," then McGrew, seeing the forces of the enemy multiplying, tried to retreat in good order, but the "Dirty Dozen" accomplisted a flank movement and cut of his retreat, and set upon him, and beat him unmercifully. Then there was one Joshus Tate, a colored gentieman, who was making things lively in the vicinity of the blast furnace, and when the officers called upon him, "refused to be come to pay a fellow workman "a little balance," and if he is not wonderfully lied upon, had he possessed as many eyes as the fabled Janus, and his creditors had served him as and if he is not wonderfully lied upon, had he possessed as many eyes as the fabled Janus, and his creditors had served him as this one did, his stock of eyes would have been exhausted long ago.
